Every artist on the program has a remarkable record, and it is seldom one has a chance to hear any of them outside of New York City. This company gave a concert in the large Massey hall in Toronto, when it was estimated that fifteen hundred people were turned away, being unable to get seats at any price. ## Current Comment

The Supreme Court Line-up.

In connection with the naming of the two new members of the supreme court and the transfer of Justice White to chief justiceship, the Washington correspondents are making a renewed effort to "line up" the court. The assumption is that there are two sides to something or other, and that in a partisan way a supreme court justice must be brought for or against this something or other.

This kind of comment, accompanied with insinuation of opinions that the justices had a part in writing, is neither profitable to the public or agreeable to the court. It is not profitable to the public for the reason that the investigation is made by men who do not bring adequate knowledge to it, with the consequence that the findings announced are generally wrong and inaccurate. There are perhaps a few lawyers who are competent to go through the record of the supreme court and collect data on which to make an intelligent prediction concerning a future decision. But these men are seldom quoted in the press. They might predict, but they won't.

They are too well aware that no two cases are ever precisely alike—are too familiar with the judicial habit of discrimination. As to the unsettled things of the law, the supreme court, as it should, feels its way. It listens before it decides. The members of the court exchange views. Time and again the non-sense of trying to divide the court into two factions has been demonstrated. The justices simply won't classify.

The new chief wrote a dissenting opinion in the Northern Securities case. Therefore he is a "conservative." But he also wrote a dissenting opinion in the income tax case. Therefore he is a "radical." If the argument is good in one case, it is good in the other. So it can be similarly shown that practically every member of the court is "conservative" and "radical." They cross and recross in their records the imaginary line. In other words, there is no proper basis for differentiation, and that there is grave disrespect for the court is shown in this everlasting and ignorant discussion of the alleged bias, this way or that, that is assumed to control justices. It is time for the newspapers to return to closer obedience to the old rule that matters sub judice are exempt from debate. Especially is it time to have a cessation of shallow and superficial alleged analysis of supreme court decisions that the analyzer never took the trouble to read, and if he did, would not understand.—New York Globe.
